Mainly during the destruction of fantasy nothings, it helps Atreyu along the way of his quest to prevent anything. Falkor's attitude purely comes from his heart, it is proven that his opening to make friends means a lot for everyone who find, in which falcor in return scissors all the friendships he has. Falkor, however, never wants to make enemies, only those who are threatens to their friends or threats in general for Fantasy. There is no knowledge of anyone or anything in fantasy that has been hostile for Falkor, just nothing and G'mork were really true enemies of him. The other thing to point is that Falkor never likes to be alone, he is always wanting to be close or even in the company of other beings or fantasy creatures, Falkor likes to have friends and who he knows will be loyal to him and not to betray your goodwill and open heart. Falkor also likes to take care and shelter those who were injured or are unconscious or even perhaps, in general, he likes to keep people safe within his reach, this is proven as Atreyu ends up sleeping on the falcor paws inside During when Atreyu was at his recovery phase after he was rescued from the sadness of sadness for him. It is represented as a discouraged female voice that speaks in rhymed speech and other wise ceasing incessantly to maintain its existence. To speak with Uyulala, it is necessary to go through the three gates: the first gate is the large puzzle gate, which consists of two sphinxes that face each other. Those trapped between their gaze are frozen in the place and condemned to remain until they solve all the puzzles of the world or to die. The second gate is the magic mirror gate, a mirror as reflected the most truthful nature of the observer. This often scares people in withdrawal or hysteria; But the observer, to pass this gate, should walk for his reflection. The third gate is the keyless gate, an indestructible key door that responds to a person's will. Just losing the desire to get into a possibility to open. Once passed, Atreyu learns the reason why the childhood empress is sick and what he must find to restore his health. Uyulala is then quiet and southern Oracle with her three gates is silently destroyed by nothing. Passing by the first two gates makes Atreyu lose the first time all fear, and then all the memory of himself. This allows him to open the keyless gate, where Bastian's voice keeps a atreyu of vagabond. The Version of the Southern Oracle film shares generalities; But the first gate judges if the person who tries to go through this "feels his own value"; If the person is dubious of his ability to pass with security, the two sphinxes incinerate the visitor. The Origle itself is, in the last analysis, two bright blue sphinxes like yellow sphinxes on the first gate and speak in prose. In the tales of NeveRending history, a hero must pass through the puzzle, which tests his confidence in himself. He should then respond to a puzzle and go through a mirror that displays the necessary thing he needs.
